This is for airships which are in operation at present. The transportation cost can be cut down more than 75 per cent merely by standardization of methods, organization for the purpose, designs which are suitable and, particularly, enlargements in the size of airship units. In this respect I believe that construction and operation must go together at the start. The more closely we can put them together, the better it will be. Furthermore, airships and airplanes should be operated simultaneously and in close cooperation, because they reinforce and supplement each other in almost every possible way. The general tendency at present is to get away from thinking in terms of any particular types. We are coming to the time when, with the growing recognition of the importance of air-travel development, we will not talk so much about designing the Zeppelin type of airship, the all-metal airplane or any other particular type. Instead, we shall go after the suitable type as an engineering problem and work it out to suit the conditions best. When we shall have done that, we will find that nothing we have done in the way of calculating the amount of available business will approach the actual possibilities. When telegraph lines were first being put in 100 years ago and even more recently than that, particularly...
