The legs are straight, or at least should be Bo in good specimens of the breed. If animals are in-kneed, or crooked in the fore legs, it argues a deficiency in blood and a comparative incapacity for work; and not only for work but for grazing too, for they will be hollow behind the withers, a point for which nothing can compensate, because it takes away so much from the place where good flesh and fat should be thickly laid on, decreasing the weight of the valuable parts of the carcass, and diminishing the capacity of the chest and the power of creating arterial and nutrioious blood. Neither should the legs be too long--a long, stilt-like leg is awkward, clumsy and cumbersome, serving only to increase the apparent height of the animal without adding to the depth of the body, and usually accompanies a frame unduly proportioned, destitute of symmetry of form, and indicates slow, dull feeding capacity and late maturity. And especially should the leg be short, small, and clean-made below the knee and hock-joints, and closely covered with the skin. The horn of the hoof should be smooth and shining and indicate a healthy growth at its junction with the hair. The eye of the Devon is very prominent, placid, full clear and bright; and the animal has a pleasing vivacity of countenance, plainly distinguishing it from the heavy aspect of many other breeds--that of the bull showing much of...
